Alder is grown primarily in the Pacific Northwest, and is often called Red Alder, as the inner bark turns reddish-orange when exposed to air.

As a fairly light and slightly soft hardwood with a smooth surface, the grain may display pin knots and mineral streaks. Colors range from nearly white or tan to a pale, pinkish brown.

With its straight, close grain, Alder offers the look of many fine hardwoods at a value price point, and is often paired with Artisan distressing and glaze to give it a high end look.

Alder & Rustic Alder are offered in all of our cabinet lines, in most door styles and stain colors. (Closets Plus features Alder only.)

Rustic Alder includes a random blend of knots, burls (swirling grain clusters) and other natural characteristics on the doors and drawer fronts. As with all Rustic styling, no single door or drawer front will perfectly match another, and each has its own characteristics.
